"Torah-Tours" To Strengthen Orthodox Ties Of College Students

A leading Orthodox Rabbi asserted that America's educational System stands in "great peril" because of the increasing influence of secularization.

The charge was made by Rabbi Abraham N. AvRutick, of Hartford, Conn., in a speech to the Rabbinical Council of America, representing 800 Orthodox rabbis. He is first vice-president of the Council, which held a three-day mid-winter conference at Lakewood, New Jersey.

Rabbi AvRutick called upon religious communities to press for greater spiritual values in non-secterian colleges, says the New York Herald Tribune. He said that "our colleges and institutions must place greater stress on the values of our religious heritage as the major contribution to the progress of the world."

As one attack on this problem the Rabbinical Council is currently engaged in assigning teams of rabbis on "Torah-tours" of U.S. colleges and military installations for the purpose of strengthening religious values of Jewish youths reared in the Orthodox tradition, he said.

At many universities, Jewish students can become members of Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation chapters, which are devoted to strengthening Jewish cultural and religious ties. In recent months and because of similar anxiety over secularization, the Roman Catholic Church has also stepped up its support of the religious and social activities of Newman Clubs for Catholics attending the big colleges.

Russian universities, Rabbi AvRutick observed, cut out courses in religious philosophy after the Communists came into power. "They have degenerated into centers for the propagation of crass materialism, narrow nationalism, and psychotic fears," he commented

A layman, Gustav Stern, philanthropist and retired bird seed producer, reported to the group at a luncheon, on the first year of progress of the Rabbinical Court Corp., of which he is chairman, says the New York Herald Tribune. The court, which saved 500 marriages in 1961, is aimed at preserving Jewish marriage ties, or, when necessary, authorizing required religious divorces.

Mrs. Florence G. Brown, executive director of the Louise Wise Services, a New York Jewish adoption agency, also discussing the conference theme of family life, appealed for a cooperative approach between social workers and rabbis in placing children, and in rehabilitating unwed mothers.

Lodz Ghetto Diary Dug Up At Auschwitz Camp Site

A watersoaked wad of papers crammed into a German mess kit was dug out of the ground near Crematorium III at the former Oswiecim (Auschwitz) concentration camp.

The 354 half-ruined sheets of paper may be the most revealing account of the Jewish martyrdom in Poland to be found since the discovery in similar circumstances of Emanuel Ringelblum's "Notes from the Warsaw Ghetto."

The new papers, containing the writings of an unknown author, a Jewish resident of Lodz, were discovered at Oswiecim last July 28, says the New York Times. The Commission for Research into Nazi Crimes, a quasi-official agency, has published the results of a preliminary examination of the find.

Apparently the document was written by a well-educated resident of the Lodz ghetto, the father of a child, probably a girl. In a detailed description of life in the ghetto, interspersed with personal comments and reflections, the author reveals himself as a sensitive man who refused to let mass death destroy his faith in life.

Of the papers deciphered, the earliest is dated May 18, 1942, and the latest January 1, 1943. However, directors of the Oswiecim Museum believe the journal, written in Yiddish, covers a much longer period.

They believe that the 354-page manuscript was written on paper cut from a bookkeeper's ledger and bisected vertically. Fifty of the sheets were disintegrated and 174 are illegible except for a few words.

The author made his record in the form of letters to "Dear Willy." Most of the "letters" were clearly never intended to be mailed, officials said. However, officials are puzzled by one "letter" that requests "Willy" to alleviate the conditions of the suffering ghetto dwellers.

Most of the manuscript describes life within the ghetto, giving precise accounts of business activities, the lot of children and experiences of individuals. The author was bitterly critical of Mordecai Chaim Rukowski, head of the ghetto government, who was one of the last Lodz Jews to enter a crematorium.

The Lodz ghetto had a maximum population of 200,000 during the war. The last 70,000 were transported to Oswiecim in the summer of 1944, says the New York Times. Oswiecim authorities said they began excavations at the Brezezinka division of the camp on the basis of information given last spring by a former member of an Oswiecim sonderkommando [special detail] assigned to cremate the bodies of gassed prisoners

The informant said that members of the special detail buried in 1944, near Crematorium III, a document-filled metal can. There might be as many as thirty more such containers buried near-by, he said.

Two of the pages deciphered, pages 315 and 316, appear to concern the author's thoughts about his starving daughter. The bracketed words were supplied by a Polish transcriber in place of illegible script. The pages read as follows:

"I want to go on living. I am ready to sell everything, my last possession. And (will I) still be able to (save her?) That I don't know.

"Already this forenoon (I did) everything possible — injections. (I am afraid) she will die right now on my hands.

"I am going to her again. But what can those incompetents do to help? When there is only one means to help—to eat! And there is very (little of that.)

"And to go and buy something at the (word illegible)—who has money for that? Whole treasures would not be sufficient to do so.

"Bread—600, flour—500, potatoes—300, margarine—900, saccharine—no price! In a word, practically (im)possible to save anyone.

"And, as a former lover of the Bible, together with the whole brotherhood of (ghetto) workers, I cry out—'and, weltering in your own blood, you shall live.'"

The prices quoted by the author were presumably expressed in ghetto scrip—marks, whose nominal value was five to $1.

Brilliant, Young Authority Built $100-Million Real Estate System Across U.S. In Two Years

Robert A. Futterman, who in comparatively few years built a $100,000,000 real estate system across the United States, died recently in New York, apparently of a heart attack, while eating. He was 38 years old and lived on Osborne Road in Harrison, N. Y., says the New York Times.

Mr. Futterman with several associates in 1950 brought together a group of real estate syndicates that consolidated their properties into the Robert A. Futterman Corporation.

In two years of operation the company's management, through the acquisition of additional properties, expanded the corporation into a $100,000,000 enterprise.

Mr. Futterman, who was reared in Yonkers, graduated from the University of Wisconsin cum laude in 1948. He had a phenomenal memory and simply by reading a book could remember almost every word.

He entered several fields before he became a realty man. He worked as a clerk for an advertising agency, as a salesman for a dress pattern company, and as a trainee in a manufacturing and distributing concern.

Mr. Futterman's real-estate career started when he went to work in 1952 for a New York law firm to assist in management duties of property owned by the firm's clients or in which they had interest.

These duties were not entirely foreign to him, his father having been associated with various real-estate firms. His first job was collecting rents from tenants in several buildings now torn down for the Lincoln Square project.

Mr. Futterman studied the whole operation, asked questions, made suggestions, and received authority to carry them out. His pay rose rapidly from $75 a week, says the New York Times. In 1955, three years after going to work as a rent collector, he was earning $30,000 a year as supervising agent for several major office buildings in New York and Philadelphia operated by the Margolin Realty Management Corporation.

Mr. Futterman took part with the company's principals in buying a midtown office building. His investment was $12,000. In 1955, when he left Margolin his investment had grown to $36,000 in cash and a continuing interest in the property.

With the $36,000 he began buying office buildings with his own associates until Futterman Corporation was formed in 1959. Mr. Futterman would start a real estate deal by scanning the past, present, and indicated future of a city in which he was offered property, rather than by figuring the probable ratio of return on his investment.

"Never buy arithmetic, always buy basics," he said in a recent interview. "Basics in a real-estate investment include a view of each city as a socio-economic organism, with its industries, municipal policies, citizens' views of their civic duties, and the means of getting in and out of town all taken into account."

An authority on urban renewal, Mr. Futterman was the author of "The Future Of Our Cities," published in August by Doubleday & Co., says the New York Times. Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Rosalie Schreiber; three sons, Michael, Evan, and Joel; two daughters, Shari, and Miryam; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Futterman; a brother, Philip; and two sisters, Mrs. Yvette Abrahamson, and Mrs. Pearl Ozorn.

Says Doctors Fail To Demand Higher Hospital Standards

A New York doctor suggested that the way to improved medical care was through strong consumer groups rather than the medical profession. Dr. Martin Cherkasky, director of Montefiore Hospital, warned the American Public Health Association that too many hospitals did not meet minimum standards.

He also expressed the opinion that physician service varied from "superb to terrible," says the New York Times. In a sharply worded paper delivered at the Association's annual meeting, Dr. Cherkasky took the medical profession to task for what he termed its failure to lead in demanding higher hospital standards and more competence among doctors.

He said: "The way we are going to make the changes necessary in the organization, delivery, payment, and improvement of medical care is not primarily by the direct action of the professional groups involved — that is, the doctors, public health people, hospital administrative groups, nursing profession, and so on — but by the action of those groups which have the power, both fiscal and political, to make their wishes effective.

"Those are the consumer groups who utilize medical care and who have the primary stake in readily available, good, quality medical care."

In spite of the minimal nature of hospital accreditation today, Dr. Cherkasky said, about 500,000 of the 1,650,000 beds in the country have not met those minimum standards. Reporting on a study of 400 cases in 100 hospitals, he said, it had shown that Caesarian sections had been made unnecessarily, and that only twenty of sixty hysterectomies could be justified.

"In no place in our society," he said, according to the New York Times, "does the consumer buy the kind of a 'pig in a poke' he does when he buys medical care. For, with rare exception, he has no way of judging professional competence.

"Where he has no way of judging, he must be helped by those who do. We must organize medical care to make it easy for doc-

Lawyer In U. S. Aided Nazi Victims To Get Rights

Dr. Bruno Weil, president of the Axis Victims League, Inc., of New York, died in Lenox Hill Hospital after a short illness. He was 78 years old and lived at the Navarro Hotel, 112 Central Park South.

Dr. Weil, an international lawyer, worked on behalf of German Jews and other victims of Nazi prosecution, particularly to obtain restitution of their property and rights, says the New York Times. As a Berlin lawyer in the pre-World War II years, he was vice-president of Centralverein, a national Jewish organization. He was said to have been the only Jewish candidate in the 1932 Reichstag elections and was defeated by Dr. Paul Josef Goebbels, later Nazi propaganda chief.

In 1935, he advised Jews living in his native Saar against fleeing, but by 1937 he was touring Latin America to discuss German Jewish immigration with statesmen there.

Dr. Weil himself fled Germany and was in Paris when the war started. After brief internment as an alien by the French, he came to the U. S. in 1940. Soon after, he began his efforts to aid Jewish refugees and to campaign for post-war Indemnification.

He was a member of the Foreign Policy Association, the International Bar Association, and an honorary member of the Federal Bar Association, says the New York Times. Dr. Weil leaves his wife, the former Alice Levy, and a stepdaughter, Mrs. Paul Flaum.

Christians Sponsor Rabbi's Trip to Jerusalem

The Christian community of New Jersey's Cape May County will not have a delegate at the convention of the World Council of Synagogues in Jerusalem next May. But both Catholics and Protestants feel that in a way they will be well represented.

At Brotherhood Week ceremonies at Wildwood, N. J., State Senator Charles W. Sandman presented a check for $1,000 to Rabbi Yakov K. Hilsenrath to defray the cost of his trip to Israel to attend the convention. Rabbi Hilsenrath will represent his congregation, Beth Judah Temple, an affiliate of the United Synagogue. The United Synagogue, congregational arm of the Conservative Movement in Judaism, is an affiliate of the World Council of Synagogues, whose convention will be held on May 29-31.

The gift was the result of a county-wide movement born of a chance remark overheard by Senator Sandman at the Temple's Hanukah ball last December. Senator Sandman, a Catholic, learned that Rabbi Hilsenrath was planning to attend the convention of the World Council of Synagogues and volunteered to have the Catholic community sponsor the trip. Eventually, the movement spread to other churches and, as Senator Sandman said during the presentation, "The membership of every church in Cape May County is in this envelope."

The Christian community undertook this gesture in recognition of Rabbi Hilsenrath's energetic endeavors for improved relations during the eight years of his service there. His record of community service was stressed by Father Thomas Piechocinsky, of St.Ann's Roman Catholic Church, and Reverend J. Francis S. Peak, of the First Baptist Church. Greetings were wired by Governor Richard J. Hughes.

During the ceremonies a Catholic girl was presented with a U.S. Government Bond as a prize for winning a high school essay contest on "The Role Of Youth In Brotherhood." The contest was sponsored by the Sisterhood of Beth Judah Temple and judged by a panel of Protestant ministers.

MOLLY AND YANKEL

BY FRANCES A. KOESTLER

It was the bitter winter of 1918, and a nation which had thought its troubles were over with the Armistice, was at war with an even deadlier enemy, the flu epidemic. Throughout the land, schools and places of public assembly were closed.

To a twenty-year-old Jewish girl from Philadelphia, arriving in Boston with a road company, the padlocked theaters meant she was stranded. Where could she borrow or earn the necessary carfare home? Fighting off panic, she bethought herself of the Yiddish acting fraternity with whom she had her early stage beginnings. Surely Boston had a Yiddish theater?

The Grand Opera House, when she located it, turned out to be an obscure place. Touched by the plight of the diminutive actress, the manager hired her. Six months later, he married her. And that was the begining of the marital and professional partnership of Molly Picon and Jacob Kalich, a partnership which has reached a new pinnacle with Molly's triumphant success in Broadway's new musical, "Milk And Honey."

A recent visit to Molly's dressing room made it clear the partnership is as strong as ever, even though "Milk And Honey" is one of the few productions starring Molly in which "Yankel," as she calls her husband, is not involved as writer, producer, actor, or director.

Pink-cheeked, relaxed, and genial, Yankel perched on a chintz-covered sofa, his affectionate glance seldom straying from the pert figure of his wife. "I was 'Columbus' where Molly is concerned," he said. "I discovered her." That was over forty years ago. "Everything we've done, we've done together," said Molly as she readied herself for the stage.

Molly's first starring vehicle, "Yankele," written for her by her husband, was a hit in Boston. "The problem was," Yankel recalled, "how to bring the show from Boston to New York. In those days, Second Avenue had its own brand of snobbery. Its stars had made their reputations in the Yiddish theaters of Warsaw, Vienna, Budapest. Boston was hardly in the same class. So we took 'Yankele' abroad and for three years played it in those same theaters. When we brought it to New York in 1923, it arrived with a first-class European reputation."

How had they succeeded in getting the European theater to accept a show from Boston in the first place? Molly turned from pencilling her eyebrows to flash a grin at her husband.

"Easy," she said. "Yankel presented me as an American novelty!"

"Yankele" was followed by other musical instrument, tap-dancing a new stunt: sleight-of-hand, walking a tightrope, playing a musical instrument, tapdancing, coming on stage astride a horse. Eventually, the Kaliches took these productions on a seven-year tour of Europe, the Near East, South Africa, and South America.

Molly regards "Milk And Honey" as the perfect vehicle for her. "Imagine," she says, "a show in which I can legitimately use the word feimmes in a song. Could anything be righter for me?"

Nothing could — nor could anyone be righter than Molly Picon for the role of a husband-hunting widow, the New York critics agreed, enchanted by her mobile face, nimble dancing, and faultless sense of timing.

Listening to RCA Victor's original cast recording of the show, it's easy to understand why Molly's second act soliloquy, "Hymn To Hymie," is a show-stopper. Addressed to her dead husband, the song laments the loneliness of widowhood, citing among other things the futility of making taimmes for one. For all that the music is a tango and the words are English, the song is pure Second Avenue in its blend of humour and pathos; the rendition is prime Picon in phrasing, intonation, and half-sob, half-chuckle with which Molly underscores a widow's dilemma.

Broadway insiders regard Molly as a front-runner for one of this season's acting awards. Bertha, her wardrobe woman, is sure of it. What's more, she says, "everybody in the cast is crazy about Miss Picon. When she's on stage you should see all of us, even old hands like me, knocking each other over to get a peep at her."

S. American Jewry Urged To Be Alert To Trouble

South American Jewry must remain alert to counter anti-Semitic manifestations, the South American Executive of the World Jewish Congress has warned in Buenos Aires. The warning was issued at a recent conference of WJC South American affiliates, a report of which has now been received in New York by Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, WJC vice-president and chairman of the North American Executive.

The central issue among Jews all over South America last year, the Buenos Aires section noted, was the Eichmann trial and verdict. The report was prepared by Dr. Moises Goldman, and Marc Turkow, chairman and secretary-general of the South American Executive, respectively. "Unfortunately," the report continues, "there are groups and individuals who have used the trial to stir up anti-Semitic activity. The leaders of all South American communities must remain alert to deal with any situation that may arise."

The report noted a "regrettable recurrence" of anti-Semitic outbursts, the appearance of anti-Jewish slogans on walls in a number of South American cities, vandalism, and attacks on Jewish buildings, and, in two instances, cemetery desecration. On one occasion there had been public expression of anti-Semitism by local political leaders, but the South American Executive of the WJC believed that the governments and thoughtful public opinion in those countries where anti-Semitic incidents had occurred condemned such manifestations.

"But there is no doubt," the statement adds, "that all South American communities must voice their protest whenever such incidents occur." The South American Executive stated that it was convinced that anti-Semitic activity on the continent was "inspired by Nazi elements and by young nationalist groups in the countries concerned." It was the responsibility of Jewish community leaders to call upon the Federal authorities in the countries involved to take action against such manifestations.

One of the other issues being given special attention by the World Jewish Congress in South America is Jewish youth and its problems. The WJC is actively collaborating with the South American University Zionist Federation, with the Jewish Agency and other organizations in the convening of two Jewish students' seminars, one in Israel and another in Chile this year.

Representatives of the Executive from Buenos Aires, on their visits to communities throughout South America have paid special attention to the problem of Jewish youth in order to develop future Jewish leadership, alert and aware of the issues facing Jewry today. The South American Executive has maintained contact with a number of communities, supplying youth centers, libraries, and schools with books and other materials on Judaism. There has also been cooperation with Jewish educational bodies in other communities in an effort to find personnel for Jewish educational institutions.

See? Noted Counselor Warns On Dating Too Young

A noted marriage counselor proposed a ban against dating for boys and girls under fifteen. Dr. David R. Mace, executive director of the American Association of Marriage Counselors, blamed many of America's current problems, including cold-war setbacks, on its "unique" dating customs.

The development of a "libertine" generation could well be the deciding factor in America's ultimate defeat by the "Puritan" generation of young Russian Communists, Dr. Mace warned in "McCall's" magazine.

"Any one who imagines that immature teen-agers can be out together in pairs, in the complete privacy that automobiles afford, in a culture saturated with sexual suggestion, and not indulge in sexual experimentation is just not being realistic," he said, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Dr. Mace said he believed the current trend toward dating at earlier and earlier ages was "an important contributing factor" to the nation's high divorce rate and lowering of moral standards.

Maritimes Section

Samuel Budovitch, of Fredericton, N. B., spent some time with his daughter, Miss Barbara Budovitch, 3385 Barclay Avenue, Montreal, Quebec.

Mrs. Sender Zilbert (nee Annie Silver), and her daughter, Dal, of Glace Bay, N. S., were in Montreal, Quebec, for the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Belke Ratowzer Silver.

Mrs. Sylvia Marshall, of Sydney, N. S., was in Montreal, Quebec, for the funeral of her father, Arthur Lerman, 4840 Bourret Street, Montreal, Quebec.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving Webber, 19 Armecrescent West, Halifax, N. S., entertained at a party in celebration of the sixteenth birthday of their daughter, Rose Beverlie.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Rosen, of Halifax, N.S., were in Miami, Florida, for the marriage of Miss Toby Lee Vann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Vann, of Miami, to his brother, William Rosen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Rosen, 2920 Van Horne Avenue, Montreal, Que., which took place at the Barcelona Hotel. Rabbi Meyer Abramowitz officiated.

Mrs. Joseph Goldman, Wentworth Street, Saint John, N. B., was hostess to the members of the executive of the Saint John Council of Women, at the regular meeting of the group. Mrs. Donald Barnes and Miss Muriel Denham assisted the hostess in serving. Mesdames Guy Chapman, and L. J. Anderson, president, presided over the teacups.

The Saint John Community Concerts Association will present the New York Instrumental Concert Trio, at the Saint John High School Auditorium, on March 13; and Rise Stevens, Metropolitan Opera star, at the closing concert, on April 30. On the selection committee are: Mrs. Norman S. Skinner, Trueman H. Clarke, David Reevey, Dr. Samuel Milrod, Mrs. R. T. Hayes and Miss Muriel Thompson; management, Mesdames K. I. Campbell and M. A. Girvan; B. R. Guss, Q.C., Norman Tait, Dr. A. D. Gibbon and Jack H. Rector. A gift to the retiring president, B. R. Guss, Q.C., was presented by Stanley E. Clarke, vice-president, on behalf of the officers and directors of the association. Mr. Clarke referred to the "able leadership Mr. Guss had rendered the organization during his term of office as president, and also for the deep interest he showed, since he and a group of citizens were instrumental in bringing Community Concerts to this city."

WARN M. C. NOT TO CREATE PHONY CEREMONIES

The tendency of some Jewish parents to hold Bar Mitzvah ceremonies in the chapels of commercial catering establishments was deplored by a group of rabbis at West Hempstead, Long Island, as "a crass lowering of religious standards."

The Nassau-Suffolk Association of Rabbis, which has forty members from the three branches of Judaism, said "such practice bespeaks a sense of irresponsibility toward the total congregational life of the community."

It noted that "masters of ceremonies and band leaders have taken it upon themselves to create arbitrarily ceremonies based upon pure theatricalism, sentimentality, and commercial appeal."

Raising Social Work Standards In Israel

This year the first graduates of the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work at the Hebrew University received their degrees, the School is now firmly established, and Dr. Eileen Blackey, who went to Israel from the U.S. four years ago to organise and get the School going, is due to leave as soon as a new director is found to replace her.

Had she enjoyed her work there? The reply to this question came back immediately. "It's been the most rewarding job I've ever undertaken. It's been stimulating and exciting. True, it's been exhausting at times, frustrating at times, but really wonderful."

These were not the reactions of a novice in the field of social work, for Dr. Blackey is an authority who can draw on a rich fund of personal experience. She has either directed or been closely associated with the direction of social work programmes and social work education in many parts of the U.S., including Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and served after the war in Germany with the U.N. Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. In the U.S. she also participated in the activities of the Council on Social Work Education, and until she left for Israel held the post of Special Consultant on Social Work Projects in the Federal Bureau of Public Assistance.

What had made her work "a joy", as she termed it, was the fact that: "Israel is so very responsive to new ideas. It may take time to convince people that those ideas are worth while, but once they are convinced things move at terrific speed. That's probably because this is a new country, with all the fluidity and creativeness which that implies, and because the need to move quickly is part of the prevailing psychology".

In her own work there had been a great deal of convincing to do, she said. For historical and ideological reasons the development of professional (as opposed to vocational) training in Israel had been rather slow, which meant that there had had to be a "cultivation of the soil" before she could get very far. True, the soil was conducive to such cultivation, for, since the establishment of the State, efforts had been devoted to meeting the new, very great demand for professionally trained personnel.

Once the attitude had begun to change — and "it has changed markedly even since I've been here" — progress had been extraordinary. More had been accomplished in the last four years to raise the level of social work and at the same time the status of the social worker than would have been possible in ten years anywhere else.

Dr. Blackey was quick to stress, however, that the battle was by no means over; at the moment a struggle is being waged to achieve recognition for the social work profession by those bodies responsible for determining its status in terms of grades and salary. Today there are about 1,000 persons engaged in social work throughout the country, all with different levels of training.

Some studied in Europe years ago, others are graduates of the former Jerusalem and Tel Aviv Schools of Social Work which were incorporated in the University's School when the latter came into being, a smaller number passed through the short emergency courses organised by the Ministry of Social Welfare after the establishment of the State, and about 50 hold the Master's degree of a graduate school of social work in the U.S. which for the most part they attended on scholarships from the National Council of Jewish Women in the U.S. (From this last category are drawn about half the teaching staff of the University School.)

All are graded according to length of service and the extent of administrative responsibility they carry, with no account being taken by the Civil Service Commission of the fact that professional training is a first requisite for social work practice. Now a new group is being added, of young people academically trained for the first time in Israel itself. What is to be their status and the salary it should command?

At stake in this matter, says Dr. Blackey, is far more than the personal interests of the individual social worker. At stake are the interests of the country as a whole. The shortage of trained social workers is enormous, and the School has been besieged with requests for graduates to fill posts in Ministries and other public bodies. But it is improbable that young men and women will be encouraged to spend three years in training at the University if they are not to be adequately compensated at the end. And if there is no such compensation, quantitatively the results are likely to be even more serious.

The School offers a three-year programme leading to the degree of Bachelor of Social Work. The first year is devoted to the study of basic subjects such as Sociology, Economics, Psychology, Social Psychology, and Political Science. During the second and third years, in addition to academic courses, students are assigned to field instruction for three days a week.

In regard to the qualitative aspect, Dr. Blackey emphasises that while the primary task of the School is to turn out well-trained graduates, it is no less concerned with the raising of social work standards in the country. There is even a selfish motive behind this, for the students in their second and third years are obliged to do field work under supervision in approved social service institutions — and obviously the higher the standards of social work in these institutions the higher the level of training achieved.

To raise those standards the School has taken a number of steps. One of these is the inauguration of special courses for supervisors to enable them better to meet the professional requirements laid down by the School. Another is the introduction of a programme enabling a carefully selected number of graduates of the former social work schools to take courses necessary to complete their training and to qualify them for the University's degree of Bachelor of Social Work. This year, for the first time, the School offered summer institutes and workshops for social workers in employment.

"These are our commitments to the community", declares Dr. Blackey, who adds that "a school of social work just can't be isolated from the community. It's our life-blood, and without it we can't survive". On the other hand, the community too is aware of the leadership role the School can play in its midst. Many organisations, including Government departments and professional groups, turn to it for advice and assistance in starting or developing certain social work activities.

Looking back on her four-year term, Dr. Blackey says in amazement: "I still don't know how we did it all. In setting up the School at the University we were doing everything for the first time; we had to introduce every feature of it concurrently. The load was overwhelming . . ."

But she had the satisfaction in July of seeing the first 41 Bachelors of Social Work receive their degrees from the Rector of the Hebrew University. These young people, 75% of whom are sabras, (native-born Israelis), have been snapped up by the social work agencies. She is hopeful that others will follow them. By their achievements they will make an immense contribution to the improvement of social work standards in Israel. And they will also increase still further the respect for their profession which has been so sadly lacking in the past.

Molly Picon's MISH-MASH

Every generation has had something to worry about. My grandparents lived with their own special terror, the Cossacks. For over a hundred years, Mama's people had their roots in a village with the impossible name of Rezshishtchov. Grandpa was a big landowner in the old country. He employed lots of peasants and sold wheat wholesale. One night a friendly neighbor burst into their house and warned, "The Cossacks are coming!" So, at a moment's notice, they had to give up a lifetime's work and run away. Grandma packed her featherbed, samovar and five children into the bottom of a hay wagon and off they went to the promised land.

They settled in Philadelphia, where Grandpa had to start from scratch with nothing but his two hands. But don't underestimate Grandpa. He found a good job in a trunk factory and made fourteen dollars a week. In those days, fourteen dollars a week was considered middle income. For a long time, Grandma ran the house on it and managed very nicely. She even had a little left over at the end of each week to save in her "pushky." Many years later, when I was playing in Loew's circuit, Mama boasted to Grandma that I was making big money. Grandma asked, "So how much does she get already?" "Three thousand five hundred dollars a week," Mama answered proudly. To which Grandma replied, "That's all? And for that she works nights?"

Could Grandma have forgotten the days when she fed a family of seven on fourteen dollars a week? I'm sure it took some doing, but leave it to Grandma. She could make a whole meal out of a little this and a little that. And so can you, as long as you have Rokeach Tomato Sauce with Mushrooms in the house. With a little left over chicken you can make what I call Picon's Potpourri, a delicious casserole dinner. Just combine the diced chicken with some cooked rice or spaghetti, pour in plenty of Rokeach Tomato Sauce with Mushrooms, cover the top with thin-sliced onions and bake in the oven. Delicious! And only because it's made with Rokeach Tomato-Mushroom Sauce, a long-simmered sauce thick with ripe tomatoes, flavorful mushrooms, and spiced to perfection. You know something? Whenever I serve roast chicken, I can hardly wait for the day after . . . Yonkel and I enjoy Picon's Potpourri much, much more!

Hospital Child Patients Celebrate Arrival Of Jaffa Oranges

The young patients of the Montreal Children's and the Ste. Justine Hospitals received a special treat from Israel when boxes of Jaffa oranges were presented to the hospitals by Trade Consul Yechiel Narkiss, of the Consulate General of Israel, in Montreal. These oranges are the produce of citrus groves whose history began in biblical times, and lapsed for centuries to begin anew in the year 1850 with the arrival in Turkish-ruled Palestine of the first Jewish immigrants. These pioneers solved the myriad problems posed by a parched and neglected land, until at last orange groves produced fruit which won international favour.

Introduced to Canada in 1955, the distinctively oval-shaped oranges created a demand that has increased with every season. New Canadians remembered them as European favorites. Delicious, virtually seedless, and easy to peel, Jaffas were not long in attracting all elements of the Canadian population. It is hoped that this season they will also be shipped to such centres as Winnipeg, Calgary, and Vancouver, realizing the great demand.

Israel is increasing its purchases from Canada (during 1961 it bought from Canada by 25% more than in 1960), and would like at the same time to expand her exports to this country. The citrus fruits and their by-products are the main export item from Israel which hopes that Canada will increase her imports of them.

The initial shipment received in New York was valued at $50,000. It was quickly auctioned to produce buyers at the New York Fruit Auction Corporation's market, Pier 28 West Street. In addition to local buyers, others bidding for the oranges represented dealers and food store chains in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and Detroit.

Seymour Schnell, of H. Schnell & Co., the importers, of 323 Washington Street, said he was pleased with the sale. He commented that the oranges should do well as a fancy fruit item and gain a permanent market in the U.S.

The Israeli Trade Commission's office helped to negotiate and coordinate the new addition to trade with the United States. Eventually the market for Jaffa oranges is expected to increase to several hundred thousand cases a year, with an export value of some $2,000,000.

The Jaffa orange shipment was celebrated by the American-Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry at the Sheraton-Atlantic Hotel. The luncheon menu of Israeli specialties was the same as that served on the same day at the Sheraton-Tel Aviv Hotel in Israel. A feature item was a "salat paz", a salad made with Jaffa oranges.

Citrus, including grapefruit, last year had a value of $46,000,000. The major shipments go to Britain, Ireland, West Germany, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia. Exports of Jaffa oranges to Canada amount to about 250,000 cases a year.

Molly "inherited" Bertha from Gertrude Berg. Her other inheritance from Miss Berg was the lead in "A Majority Of One." Molly played the role in the London production. Last summer, when she toured a summer circuit with it, one performance was attended by Helen Hayes, who went backstage to pay her compliments.

"This is a great thrill," five-foot Molly told her visitor. "For years people have been calling me the Helen Hayes of the Yiddish stage."

"Well," replied the equally tiny Miss Hayes, "from now on I'm going to bill myself as the shiksa (gentile girl), Molly Picon!"

Despite their many triumphs before paying audiences, Molly and Yankel consider their crowning experience to have been the performances they gave in European displaced persons camps after World War II. Among the earliest civilians to wangle their way into Warsaw following the end of hostilities, they sought out the remnants of the Jewish community to bring them a message of hope and reassurance that they had not been forgotten.

They brought something else as well. At a DP camp one evening their concert was repeatedly interrupted by the wailing of a small child. In annoyance, a member of the audience whispered to the little one's mother, "This is no place for a baby!"

"For this baby, it is," replied the mother. "My son was born in this camp. Tonight for the first time in his life he is hearing the sound of laughter. How could I let him grow up without it?"

So long as life produces Molly Picons, the healing gift of laughter will be shared by all.

She was gowned in white satin, made with a jacket; a fitted bodice; round neckline; three-quarter-length sleeves; and full skirt appliqued with lace and seed-pearl-beads, and continuing as a long train. National Council For Jewish Education To Call On Federations For All-Day Schools Funds

The National Council for Jewish Education Executive Board, meeting at the Jewish Agency Building, 515 Park Avenue, New York, resolved to call upon Federations and Welfare Funds to extend financial support to Jewish All-Day schools, it was announced by Dr. Joseph Diamond, of Toronto, Ont., president. This aid, it said, should be extended through the central Bureau of Jewish education in communities where central agencies exist; and where no such agency exists, directly through the Federation and Welfare Funds.

Bureaus of Jewish education everywhere were called on to foster and encourage the growth and development of Jewish All-Day schools in their respective communities, and to make available to the day schools professional guidance and financial, moral, and education assistance as are usually offered by them to other types or systems of Jewish education. The Executive Board of the National Council noted the growth of the All-Day school and called its emergence a major form of Jewish education in numerical strength and wide-spread appeal. It said the contribution of the Jewish All-Day school raises the sights and goals of Jewish education and meets the growing need for an intensive Jewish education. It took into account the American democratic milieu which sanctions legally and morally the fostering and maintenance of such educational programs of the distinctive religious-cultural life of its diverse religious and cultural groups.

The Executive Committee of the National Council adopted this resolution by direction of its last national conference. At its 36th annual conference, the end of May, in Atlantic City, N. J., steps will be considered to implement this resolution. The National Council for Jewish Education is composed of leading Jewish educators in the United States of all branches, Conservative, Orthodox, and Reform. It comprises the professional heads of central Jewish educational agencies, Bureaus of Jewish education, and higher institutions of learning.

Canadian Jewish Congress Submits Brief To North York Board Of Education On Religious Education In Public Schools

The Canadian Jewish Congress, jointly with the Ethical Education Association, submitted a brief to the North York Board of Education on Religious Education in Public Schools. Though the brief was received by the Board, it was not read because of procedural objections.

The Congress brief was signed by Sydney M. Harris on behalf of the Canadian Jewish Congress. It reiterated that the Ethical Education Association and the Canadian Jewish Congress "are opposed in principle to the continuation of the present religious education program in the public schools of Ontario. Accordingly, we have in the past petitioned the North York Board to seek complete exemption for the schools within its jurisdiction. Periodically we have indicated support for the 3.30 plan as a temporary measure to alleviate some of the tensions resulting from this curriculum . . . We respectfully request that the Board adopt a standard policy throughout the Township. Regardless of the hour at which the course is given, all parents should be informed as to the nature of the course and their rights thereunder. They should be sent a form explaining all of these matters including the hour at which the course is taught and what the arrangements will be for those children who are exempted. It is important that the form contain a questionnaire wherein the parents affirmatively state whether they wish their children to receive this religious education or whether they wish exemption."

The Toronto Star commented editorially ("High-Handedness In North York" — February 7) saying: "North York school board members were high-handed at their meeting this week when they refused to hear official briefs on religious education prepared by the Canadian Jewish Congress, by United Churchmen and by Anglicans. Their ban was all the more objectionable because these organizational representatives of parental opinion in North York had appointments to present the briefs, and a time for hearing them was set aside on the board's schedule for that evening.

"In most North York Schools, children are required to take religious education during the morning unless their parents specifically ask for exemption. This policy was modified last year in case of twelve public schools where there is a large number of pupils who claim exemption from the instruction in Protestant Christianity. The classes are held in the last period of the school day and parents are sent a questionnaire asking if they wish their children to take, or not to take, the course.

"What the unheeded joint Canadian Jewish Congress — Ethical Education Association brief proposed was mild. It mainly asked that the board standardize the policy for all North York schools, so that every parent would be asked at the first of the school year to signify whether he wished his child to have the course in religion or to be exempted from it.

"The proposal is neither unfair nor unseemly. As long as the public schools give religious instruction, which inescapably has a doctrinal influence on a young pupil, the trustees should make the course truly optional, something the parent chooses the child to have.

"The proper disposal of this divisive issue is to remove the course from the public schools, it was imposed only in 1944; and leave Christianizing to the home and church. Any school course in religion should be reserved for a senior grade in high school, as an academic study of the history of all major religions."

An earlier editorial in the Toronto Star (January 29), entitled "Shift Classes In Religion", indicated: "There are two democratic ways to improve the situation. Put all classes in religion at the end of the school day; ask every parent at the beginning of the school year to signify whether he wishes his child to have religious instruction — yes or no. These two changes would lessen discrimination and make the course a matter of choice, not of inert compulsion. But the basic remedy is to take religious instruction out of the schools entirely and put the responsibility on the home and church where it properly belongs . . . A knowledge of religion is part of any educated person's equipment. But if the schools are to impart it, the course should be given in senior high schools . . . And it should not be limited to Christianity or one branch of it, but should be taught as an academic subject, like history and biology."

American Jewish Congress Asks N. Y. Board Of Education To Discontinue Bible Reading In Public Schools

The American Jewish Congress called on the New York City Board of Education to discontinue Bible-reading in the public schools. Asserting that school Bible-reading was "widespread" in the city school system, the AJCongress cited the unanimous ruling of a Federal District Court in Philadelphia which held unconstitutional a Pennsylvania law requiring that ten verses of the Bible be read in schools each day. The Pennsylvania statute was invalidated by the U.S. Court even though pupils could be excused from participating in the Bible-reading on the request of their parents.

The practice in New York City schools, the Congress said, is apparently in accordance with a by-law of the Board of Education declaring: "The regular assemblies of all schools shall be opened by reading to the pupils a portion of the Bible without comment." "Numerous complaints" to the Congress from its members in all five boroughs confirm the fact, the letter said, that the by-law is being followed.

The American Jewish Congress letter, signed by Howard Squadron, chairman of the organization's Metropolitan Council, and Leo Pfeffer, AJCongress general counsel, called attention to a statement by a State Education Department spokesman in Albany that Bible reading was illegal in the public schools of New York State. "Nevertheless, within the City of New York, the practice of reading from the Bible in public schools is widespread," the letter declared. "It seems to us incongruous that the very schools whose obligation it is to teach good citizenship, the first principle of which is obedience to law, should themselves violate the law."

In its letter to the Board, the American Jewish Congress described as "particularly significant" the fact that the Federal court held Pennsylvania's Bible-reading law unconstitutional despite an amendment permitting children to be excused from the exercise on written notice from either a parent or guardian. The Congress had submitted a friend-of-the-court brief challenging both the Bible-reading practice and the prayer recitation as "religious intrusions" barred under the Constitution.

In urging the Board to annul its by-law and issue a directive to all public schools to "discontinue the reading of the Bible as an act of devotion and, wherever it may still be in practice, to discontinue as well the recitation of the Lord's Prayer," the Congress stated:

"Children of minority religious groups are faced with a dilemma whenever religion intrudes upon the public school. This dilemma is always hard and frequently cruel, for such children must either subject themselves to being singled out as 'different' or participate in religious practices and teachings that contradict what they learn at home or in the house of worship they attend. Not infrequently, Catholic and Jewish children will participate in Protestant religious practices in violation of their religious convictions and upbringing rather than subject themselves to the pain of not belonging.

"Under the guaranty of separation of church and state and religious freedom, American children may not be placed in this dilemma by public school authorities. The Federal court, by its decision, has recognized that the state cannot require school children to engage in acts of worship which conflict with their religious conscience. The New York City Board of Education, we respectfully submit, can do no less." The reading of a few verses daily from the Bible in the public school might not seem to present a major threat to the constitutional guaranty of separation and religious liberty. But the practice is not trivial to those whose religious convictions are offended by it.

"Adherence to the traditional American separation of church and state has resulted in the elevation of religion to a status of strength and influence unparalleled in the world, and in the evolution of a system of public education for all children free of sectarian strife and controversy. Preservation of that enviable position of religion and school, as the U.S. District Court has ruled, requires continued faithful adherence to the American principle."

QUEBEC — ONTARIO
— THE MARITIMES

IT TAKES A 6¢ STAMP TO GET YOUR LETTER TO EUROPE.

When next you write your surface mail letter to Europe, make sure it has sufficient postage — 6 cents for the first ounce, 4 cents for each additional ounce.

- If you are in doubt as to the correct weight, check it at your Post Office. Much unnecessary delay occurs when letters have to be returned to the sender for extra postage.
- Always address the envelope clearly, correctly and completely — use the initials or first name of the addressee and write out in full the name of the country to which the letter is addressed.
- Place your return address in the upper left hand corner and include number, street, postal zone number (where regional) City or Town and Province.

Correct postage, complete and legible addressing, speeds the delivery of your mail.
